Nearly four weeks after the death of Indy Steelers founder Richard Donnell "Coach Nell" Hamilton, his youth football team was back on the practice field at Tarkington Park, this time led by Hamilton's youngest son, Dontaye. "I felt like I had to be out there," Dontaye said that cold February day. "I know it was important for those kids to see me. Maybe it benefited me more than it benefited them."

Trump sidesteps abortion issue in his campaign

DAVENPORT, Iowa – No elected Republican has done more to restrict abortion rights in the U.S. than Donald Trump.

But in the early days of the 2024 presidential contest, no Republican has worked harder to avoid the issue than the former president. Far more than his GOP rivals, Trump is sidestepping the issue just nine months after he and his party celebrated the Supreme Court's decision to strip away the constitutional right to abortion.

Look no further than Trump's recent trip to Iowa for evidence of his delicate balancing act.

Moments after he stepped off his plane just outside Davenport, Trump repeatedly refused to say whether he would support a federal law restricting abortion in every state, a move that anti-abortion activists are demanding of the GOP's presidential contenders.

"We're looking at a lot of different things," Trump said when asked twice by The Associated Press whether he supports a federal abortion ban.

A massive redevelopment project of several buildings on North Meridian Street will bring housing, retail and medical care facilities to the near north side of Indianapolis.

Here are details of the developments, the combined costs of which are $65 million.

Adult and Child Health center

The vacant 40,000-square-foot building at 1840 N. Meridian St. and parking lot on Illinois Street was previously owned by Indianapolis Public Schools and used as office space but has been vacant for seven years.

Indianapolis-based developers Innovcare and TWG Development, along with commercial real estate agency Colliers and health care provider Adult and Child Health are teaming up for the project.
